McKinley's Views.

Washington, Nov. 28.—Representative McKinley reached Washington Wednes-day. He does not wear any regrets on his coatsleeve, an expression of satisfac-tion and contentment beams on his countenance, and he voices nothing but hope in his conversation. He says that defeat now have nothing to do but get together never be bothered with them. and work so as to carry the country next time. He does not think that any great success will attend an attempt on the part of Democrats to destroy the McKin-ley bill by dealing with one article at a time in separate bills, as proposed by Senator Vest. Such bills he says, would be subject to amendment and it would be difficult to keep the measure within the lines designed. It would, he says, take a very close corporation to carry out such a plan. Speaking of the approaching session, he said:

"I think congress will go with the same that the Santa Fe company has bought this road. Probably incorrect."

"I think congress will go right ahead with business. The house will pass the appropriation bills, probably the apportionment bill, the circuit court bill, and, I rather think, one of the shipping bills, in a modified form."

"How about the followed short the state of the shipping bills, in the short the following the state of the shipping bills."

'How about the federal election bill?' he was asked. "I do not know. I have not talked loud among the business men of the ter-with any of the senators on the subject. They have a bill of their own, have they not? I have expected that they would pass it and I presume they will."
